Although there were many evidences of immoral living, Nicaragua is still a very religious culture. No one turned us down for a Bible study. People considered it an honor that someone came by their house to talk to them about Jesus, and they sat patiently for one or two hours of Bible discussion. Most Nicaraguans have been baptized into the Roman Catholic Church as children, but few are active. Though they hold the Bible in high regard, religious tradition still exerts a great influence. Thanks to all who support this work.

On July 4, 1771 the Continental Congress adopted the Declaration of Independence. Four days later, on July 8, 1771 colonists gathered in Philadelphia to hear the Declaration read. Afterward, they celebrated the Nation's first "Independence Day." In the years that followed, citizens across America celebrated their hard-won freedom on July 4. Not until 1941 however, was the fourth of July set aside as a national holiday.
